

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A method of producing an electrically conductive roll having a proper crown shape at lower costs through a smaller number of process steps and without polishing. In this production method, a crown-shaped rubber layer is formed unitarily on a metal core by variably controlling the amount of a rubber material adhering on the metal core along the length of the metal core during extrusion of the rubber material.